Governor Bullock Issues Travel Advisory to Slow Spread of COVID-19

Montanans traveling internationally should self-quarantine for 14 days

BUTTE, MONT. - Governor Steve Bullock today issued a travel advisory for Montanans who have traveled internationally to self-quarantine for 14 days after returning to Montana.

"As Montanans return from spring breaks, Montanans who have been traveling internationally should take the proactive step to self-quarantine for 14 days to avoid spreading the virus to their community," Governor Bullock said. "Prevention is our best tool for combating COVID-19. The ability to slow new infections is in our hands and our friends and neighbors are counting on us to do the right thing."

Governor Bullock is advising that Montana citizens who have traveled internationally self-quarantine for 14 days and contact their local health department.

Today the State Department advised that U.S. citizens abroad should return home unless staying for an indefinite period and that international travel should be avoided. The CDC has recommended U.S. residents to delay all states travel and anyone who has traveled on a cruise ship should self-quarantine for 14 days after returning from traveling.

Experts are working quickly to fully understand how COVID-19 is transmitted and while the disease is reported to be most contagious when people are the most symptomatic, recommendations from the CDC suggest people could be infectious without or before experiencing symptoms. People can also experience mild symptoms and nevertheless they are infectious. By staying home after traveling, Montanans can play a key role in preventing spread in the community.

If Montanans experience symptoms such as a fever, cough, or trouble breathing, they should call their health provider and share their travel history.

For more information about COVID-19, Montanans can call the state's toll-free hotline at 1-877-333-6963 or visit covid19.mt.gov.
